Actress Noreen DeWulf ("Anger Management," "West Bank Story," "Good Girls,") and her husband, two-time Olympian and Anaheim Ducks goalie Ryan Miller, share a tall and modern house in Manhattan Beach, California, with their 5-year-old son, Bodhi, and French bulldog, Puck. Working with their designer, Lindye Galloway, the couple created a modern indoor-outdoor oasis exclusively with furniture from Gloster. "We were pitched a few ideas for our indoor-outdoor spaces but we weren't really responding," DeWulf says. "I was visualizing something more European, something chic. I wanted the spaces to feel sophisticated and luxurious, almost like a boutique hotel." A getaway to the Ojai Valley Inn and spa germinated the idea of an outdoor fireplace surrounded by comfortable chairs, and she came home ready to transform her space. "I started to look for outdoor furniture that fit the mood I felt inspired by," DeWulf says. "I happened upon Gloster and fell in love with their pieces and the artisanship of each line they carry."

With the help of Galloway and the team from Gloster, for the space near the fireplace on their indoor-outdoor patio, the couple chose Dune chairs, designed by Sebastian Herkner, with fabrics by Sunbrella for Gloster in earthy Dot Oyster, Tuck Malt, Wave Buff and Ravel Dune. The side table is a Meteor powdered-coated base (like the chair frame) with a Nero ceramic top. Underfoot, a Rope Mélange outdoor rug shown in a Hazel weave softens the terrace. "We worked with Ryan and Noreen to design outdoor spaces that felt both luxurious and comfortable, creating the perfect outdoor oasis," Galloway says. "By the pool, we wanted to design a spot for gathering by the fireplace but also give flexibility to move the furniture around the pool area. The chairs did just that." On a sliver of space beside the thin pool, the couple selected a pair of elegant white Voyager deck chairs by designer Povl Eskildsen. "The pool patio is a great place to cool off," Miller says. "I like to sit in the Dune chairs and feel the breeze. Our little guy, Bodhi, loves the pool and hot tub, so sitting there with him is a nice way to pass the time."

Upstairs, an open-air deck allows views of the ocean. There, a sofa, club chairs and ottoman from the Maya Collection by designer Mark Gabbertas echo the Meteor powder-coated frame of the pieces downstairs, and are covered in a Castillo Dove Sunbrella fabric for Gloster. "On the deck, where we knew barbecues and casual dining would happen, the sofas and chairs provide ample seating that perfectly complements the architecture of the home," Galloway says. Right now, these open-air spaces are especially appreciated by the family, with Noreen, Ryan, Bodhi and Puck ("Bodhi's best friend during quarantine," DeWulf says) being outdoors more often than not. "We had no idea how important the open-air quality of the home would be, as we built it pre-pandemic," DeWulf says. "But now during Covid, the indoor-outdoor rooms are the only places we feel comfortable being social with others. The open air also gives a sense of being outdoors in the wonderful California weather while maintaining a sense of privacy. We have really enjoyed this element of the house." ■ Gloster, gloster.com
